UCF and the Program

The University of Central Florida's College of Graduate Studies is announcing the creation of the UCF Diverse Academic Opportunities Program. UCF is committed to engaging in holistic enrollment strategies to attract, admit, and retain a broad range of graduate students to our doctoral programs.

Within the College of Graduate Studies we understand that diverse and underrepresented graduate students can be successful in completing a doctoral degree having come to this point by traveling a multiple of paths to achieve their academic goals. Some of those paths have been easy and some paths have been filled with barriers to overcome. It is not always about recognizing that you have been perfect in walking the academic path. It is more that you have walked it, been successful, and desire to experience more that the path has to offer you. These promising doctoral students dynamically model the fabric of our communities by representing people of diverse demographic and socioeconomic backgrounds.

Benefits

UCF's College of Graduate Studies pays all the costs of the visit including transportation, lodging, local travel from and to the airport, and meals.

Come and visit the University of Central Florida before formally submitting an application for graduate study.

Program Eligibility

The UCF Diverse Academic Opportunities Program is available to prospective PhD applicants from populations traditionally underrepresented in higher education and within specific fields of study.

Limited to 25 potential PhD applicants!

Preference will be with diverse or underrepresented applicants at the junior, senior, or master's level.

If this sounds like you,
