Capstone Experience

Non-thesis students are required to complete a capstone experience, either a project or an internship, before graduating. Capstones are as varied as students’ goals and programs, but past projects have included creating a training manual or workshop, writing a policy to address some problem in the workplace, writing a literature review to show best practices, and writing a grant proposal or small business plan. Most students who choose the project are working in their field and want to propose a solution to some problem in their field or workplace. Students have interned at Walt Disney World, Tampa Zoo at Lowry Park, and Apple, among many other companies both small and large. Internships are best for students who need more experience in their field.

After working in your degree program, your choice may not make sense anymore, so you may change your capstone ideas with your program advisor. However, we want to know what you think makes more sense for you at this time. Please check the appropriate box below:

At this time, I believe my capstone experience should be: Project Internship
